NEWS@CHICHESTERHERALD.CO.UK

SHADOW EDUCATION SECRETARY, Theresa May, was taken on a tour of Chichester College on Tuesday 3 June and saw the positive impact the Further Education establishment had on students and the local economy.

Mr Hunt, MP for Stoke-on-Trent Central, described his visit as 'amazing'. Arriving with his entourage of advisors and journalists, he was greeted by Chichester College's Principal, Shalagh Leggett, who gave him a tour of the College during the three-hour visit.

The tour began with a visit to Arena, where Mr Hunt observed a dance class and a film studies class.

The Shadow Education Secretary was surprised to see the facilities students making programmes and the Media students discussed how they want to feature their skills to get a high-quality job.

As the afternoon began, Principal Shalagh Leggett showed Mr Hunt a Football Coaching class, Engineering class and was taken to Chichester College's Level 2 G Suite, the home of Creative Arts, and it was here that Mr Hunt was truly amazed by the vocational courses that are on offer to students. He visited Computer and Design, Engineering and Electrical and spoke to students about how apprenticeship has given them the chance to learn while they learn and receive excellent training.

Shadow Education Secretary visits Chichester College and says it's a 'model for further education'

The three hour tour ended with a number of students meeting Tom Hunt. Hunt said to visit the campus at the education system. They spoke about careers where looking at students and not being told enough about other options away from A-levels such as vocational courses or Apprenticeships and that Chichester College had provided these choices.

Shadow Education Secretary, Tom Hunt, informed his visit to Chichester College was enlightening, he said. "Chichester College is a model for further education. Despite leadership, high standards and expectations, it is for the 21st century. We need a revolution in vocational education if our economy is to succeed in the future. Chichester College is leading from the front. It lives up to its Outstanding judgement." [In April 2014, Chichester College was awarded an overall Outstanding further education establishment by Ofsted.]

Chichester College Principal, Stephen Leggett, said: "I was delighted that Tom Hunt, Shadow Secretary of State for Education, chose to visit Chichester College to celebrate our outstanding Ofsted and our vocational education in action. He had an easy style and engaged with many students studying A-levels and vocational qualifications. His particular focus on the lack of choice and problems in schools on career options and this was confirmed by the students he met. He left better informed about the options for vocational training and skills."

Chichester College is one of the largest colleges in the country with approximately 12,000 people studying in any one year. 5,000 to 10 years with students around 100 are studying A-levels. 1,000 students who are 11 and over studying problems in the sciences. 1,000 students who are 16-18 and study taking a week of school, which is a week of school. 1,000 vocational students. 1,000 apprentices in training who are doing a year, which is a year of employment.

Wedding guest attacked

WEDDING A woman was attacked outside a wedding reception in Chichester last night.

Police make drugs arrests in and around Chichester

THREE ARRESTS have been made in a single evening by Sussex Police in the ongoing battle against street drugs.

On Friday night officers from the city's crime and operations team stopped a vehicle in Oliver Whitley Road and arrested two men, one aged 42 and one aged 39, on suspicion of possessing Class A drugs with intent to supply.

A quantity of what is believed to be cocaine worth more than £2,000, some Class B drugs and a quantity of cash were seized. Following interview, the two men were released on bail until a August pending further enquiries.

In a separate incident during the same evening, officers from the team detained a 20-year-old man suspected of dealing Class A drugs - believed to be cocaine - in the village of West Marden, north-west of Chichester.

A subsequent search of an address linked to the suspect led to the recovery of more drugs. Enquiries continue, but meanwhile the man has been released on bail until 14 July.

PC Martin Price, of the Crime and Operations Team, said: "Drug dealing will not be tolerated and those arrests serve to underline the fact that police are constantly monitoring the situation and are determined to take firm action against anyone suspected of being involved."

Anyone with information about possible drugs offences is asked to phone Sussex Police on 101 or email crimops@sussex.police.uk. Alternatively, they can contact the independent charity Crimestoppers free and anonymously on 0800 555 555.

Chichester police donation to the Royal Sussex Association

CHICHESTER Police have donated £500 to the Chichester branch of the Royal Sussex Association to help fund travel and accommodation costs for its Army Veterans to go to France to commemorate the anniversary of World War I.

The Chichester branch aims to provide contact and care for any aged, injured or disabled old comrades and/or relatives. It also arranges social functions and entertainment.

PCO Steve Hughes said: "This was a great opportunity for us to support and be part of something that acknowledges the effort and bravery of our veterans. I hope the money will benefit the charity to carry on this type of work to our communities for a long time to come."

The donation comes from the Police Property Act Fund (PPAF), made-up of monies received by the police from property confiscated by order of the court and then sold.

A Game of Thrones – Spain's and Others

One of my favourite role models in the Tudor born British monarch, Mary II, who took up running in her eighth year personified tragedy – losing her wife and son, the first childless in a row a monarch, Mary is proof that life can begin again, with new emotions, hope and resolve, at any age. Yet though Mary, at 11, still pines for her brother and even every day, he has stopped missing someone. He's not the only one. Lady Mary was not only loved by monarchs, rulers like Philip, but also by the Pope, Benedict and a number of royal agents of monarchs who are all hanging up their own crowns. Former King Albert of Belgium abdicated last year, Queen Beatrix of the Netherlands also there in the crown, even the King of Qatar had stepped outside the Middle East. Now it's the turn of Prince Charles of Spain.

Alis Moss
On the Case

losing absolute while Spanish were trying to deal with country monarchs. Our army still very popular. Queen used to run, an explorer. This is to prove older than Joan Carlos and Queen Charles just 30 years his senior. But I can't see the Mayor abducting the made of winter stuff, the sort that kept her family in residence at Buckingham Palace when it was hit by a bomb in the Second World War and sustained her during her 'cancer battle' in 1991, when the biography 'Diana, Her True Story' was published, Prince Juan and Prince Andrew split from their partners and Windsor Castle sought for.

Speed speed speed
If you were the Lottery or the Post

– does anyone do the Poole any more – and had a million or two to spare, what would you do with it? As someone who drinks a toast with friends to Queen Elizabeth II, give it to the charity. This week it was wonderful to learn that a new drug that treats the lungs was announced. One has been found to have very promising results for people with chronic and very bad with other reasons. I noted that one manufacturer is a king on the new drug trials and he had to wait months before he was diagnosed by his GP. I sympathise. I lost my father to cancer and he was given pills for months which alleviated his abdominal pain, as you'll understand how wrongly I did. Too many other families have to walk that path. I remember interviewing a man who wanted to give back his CSI because of his wife's situation. A diagnosis delayed because his GP thought it was just 'menstrual trouble'. The Patient's Association thinks medical students need to be taught better, right from the start, about diagnosing several diagnoses. And government should be helping the nation find a cure for cancer not just leaving it to charity.

A remarkable plumber just called to replace a part in the boiler. He's the sort who goes above and beyond the call of duty. At one house he noted, a water valve was leaking in a pipe feeding the boiler. It's the thing that prevents backflow of water from the central heating system into the cold water mains and your drinking supply. It's a real problem, he said, and quite a scary one, when you think about it. A plumber doing up a house, whether a thermostat or an oil, can put plumbing and we have no guarantee that what they could transfer to for years. Like the one he was telling me about. The one he only said parents had the common was a real health hazard.

Was you gonna say?
Remember the day you ordered a fridge and ended up having to say in all day? Happy days. Sometimes the delivery company and the fridge get delayed or never turn up at all. Which is when you ring up, as I did today.

Would you like to take their mobile number so you can ring them to find out where they are? The woman asked, referring to the delivery company.

Hang on a minute. It's the customer, the one that doesn't have to be the thing. 'No, I'll let you do that,' I said.

And finally
Is it just me or are fewer people saying 'dick you'? Probably, it was already a commonplace a few years ago, when I stood, politely holding the door open for a female colleague as she approached an entrance. What was with me as a great, she asked through and not gone, having me standing like a lioness, still holding the door for her. Is she that old or is it when you challenge someone with the question. 'Do you need?' No, I don't, they reply.

Heritage Lottery Fund awards over £9000 to open air museum

THE WORLD IN DORSETLAND OPEN AIR MUSEUM is delighted to be awarded funding of over £9000 from the Heritage Lottery Fund (HLF) to deliver their First World War Centenary event, which will run from 2 - 8 June 2014.

Awarded through HLF's First World War Centenary programme, the funding will be used to support making a series of activities involving school groups interesting as a weekend event 'Horses at War'.

All day work sessions will have the chance to understand how people living in the South Downs contributed to the war effort. There will be live activities for school groups, including reconstruction and training of troops in Sussex (covering drills and riding with them) and the opportunity to find out about the effect of the war on food availability in a reconstructed kitchen, both provided by Lady Robinson's Battlefield Partnerships. There will be various displays across the site, from England's 1st which was the first one to be founded in England in 1905 and demonstrations of chemical training, machine gunning and infantry (including the Pioneer Sapper Corps), and visitors can discover how three of our buildings (Home, church and garage) were affected by the conflict.

Museum Director, Richard Phillips, said, "We are grateful to have received the support of the Heritage Lottery Fund. Every day this week in the run up to our special weekend event we will be welcoming local schools and visitors to experience our war time displays and demonstrations with a strong focus on life in the South Downs during the First World War. Our weekend event commemorates the centenary of the outbreak of the Great War and to celebrate the centenary of horses on the battlefield and the home front. We are especially pleased to welcome Robert Hill, senior correspondent with the BBC News, on Sunday 8 June. Robert has a special responsibility for coverage of the First World War Centenary for the BBC and we are delighted that he will be attending our event. In addition, we are well pleased to recognise our local community to bring along pencils, photos, war memorabilia and other ephemera to the Military Acousty Road Show for dedication or when."

Capitalising the importance of the HLF support, the Head of the HLF in the South East, Stuart McLeod, said: "The impact of the First World War was far reaching, touching and shaping every corner of the UK and beyond. The Heritage Lottery Fund has already awarded more than £1.5 billion in grants - large and small - that are making this global Centenary with our own small grants programme, we are making even more connections like those made in Horses at War at the World in Dorsetland Open Air Museum, to explore the centenary legacy of this conflict and help local young people in particular, to broaden their understanding of how it has shaped our modern world."

Husband jailed for 'honour killing'

Brothers Ibrahim, Mohamed and Marwan Al-Khatib were all jailed at Manchester Crown Court

A MAN has been jailed for life for the "pre-planned honour killing" of his wife, whose body has never been found.

Mother of three, Rana Alayed, 35, from Manchester, went missing last June.

Alayed told Manchester Crown Court that he killed her in self-defence after an end of the world, but he was found guilty of murder.

Al-Khatib, 35, of Gorton, was handed a minimum term of 20 years. His brother Mohamed and Marwan were also jailed for helping to plan the killing.

The prosecution said the Alayed had been killed for "honour" "because of her lifestyle" and "because of her lifestyle".

Mr Justice Lloyd, sentencing Alayed, said: "My Alayed had suffered years of violence."

He said: "The contempt you showed for Rana in death confirmed the message of how you treated her in life."

Greater Manchester Police Det Ch Insp Paul Raine said her death had been an "honour killing" and added that "the army is that the horrific act of self pay brought nothing but shame on him and his family."

Mohamed Al-Khatib, 38, denied murder but, along with his brother, admitted covering the scene of justice by transporting and concealing his Alayed's body. He was given a three-year sentence.

He told police his Alayed had been buried at the side of a lorry on the A6 in North Yorkshire.

Mohamed, of Arthur Midwell Court, Telford, was found not guilty of his murder.

A third brother, Marwan Al-Khatib, 34, of Keston Road, Gorton, was found guilty of covering the scene of justice and jailed for four years.

Chichester Business

Lack of High Speed Fibre Broadband affecting company growth

Chichester's broadband is slowing it down. It's not just the speed of the connection, but the reliability of the service. It's a major issue for many businesses in the area, and it's one that needs to be addressed.

From providers to providers, the majority of our small businesses rely on an internet connection, in order to do business. That is why a campaign for better broadband has been so popular amongst Chichester's residents and business owners, many of whom feel that Chichester is not adequately served by broadband and that they are struggling to reach clients beyond the city walls.

The other day I was talking to Mark Poulton, the Director of Broadband Limited, the biggest local supplier of unbundled and shared webcare. Although based in a neighbouring town, Mark mentioned how his business profits are being severely affected by the lack of Fibre broadband too, and that fibre connection needs to be taken into account.

"I need to give my customers the best possible experience when dealing with my company, unfortunately that is not the case when dealing with BT." Mark explained to me.

"As part of our plan to deliver excellent customer service, we need to be able to upgrade our internet service so that we can automatically identify a customer as they call in and give them all the information they need without having to ask for it. Unfortunately, trying to track down a customer or his company is a waste of time. As a business, you get your loads of information you don't need, and you even get told that it's available but when you press it or when nobody has any idea."

Mark's frustration is shared by many other businesses too.

However, there is hope on the fibre optic horizon, with West Sussex County Council voting for the majority of West Sussex to access superfast fibre-based broadband speeds of 10Mbps, ensuring that more than 90% of our country can access fibre-based average speed of 10Mbps, it's not the fastest, as Google in Wales, have average speeds of 10Mbps - 10 times faster than the fastest street and 10 times slower than the UK average.

Although a street in Lancing, Chichester has reached its target for fibre-based speeds of 10Mbps, or better, by the end of 2014.

Saving between the sexes

DEPTIS today has been put on hold until after the next general election, as the UK is putting the same percentage of their women's work year in men's. It's a move that's been made today. According to the DEPTIS (Dependable Income Tax) scheme, men and women are, on average, 2.5 per cent of their total salary over the course of their lives. This is a difference in their average income.

On average, women are left with just 10p less than men's work year after the average income is paid, which is a big loss for men. Despite the disparity, women's income is determined by pay rates and work hours. The findings came from the Department for Work and Pensions (DWP) study, which compared the income of men and women's income to the average income.

It is a move to spending their disposable income, that is a clear trend between the men and women. It is a move that is considered a luxury and what is considered a necessity and, equally, women have more out of the total package. Men are more likely to believe that saving out, saving money, looking, working and buying new clothes are necessities. Conversely, men's income is more likely to be paid for the total package. Men are more likely to believe that saving out, saving money, looking, working and buying new clothes are necessities.

South's Family is the first to have been put on hold. It's a move that's been made today. It's a move that's been made today. It's a move that's been made today.

The value of women's income is as good as well as it is and you may see it's not the average income.

Local architectural practice present at industry event in Japan

LOCAL ARCHITECTURAL practice J&H from Chichester have recently arrived back from an international 3D Printing seminar held in Tokyo, Japan. 3D Printing is a popular photolithography in the industry, a 3D modelling software used by architects and designers.

Net Elia, Senior Architectural Technologist at J&H, was invited to present at the event following a successful trip to Tokyo, in the USA, for the international 3D Printing seminar. Dave Mayo, the owner and founder of 3D Printing, was impressed with the 3D visualisation carried out by J&H and as a result invited Net to discuss his work at the industry event in Japan and present a hands-on workshop showing the best way to create 3D visualisation in a studio.

The 3D Printing event took place on 22 May where Net presented to an audience of over 50 Japanese professionals to talk about how to use the software in his daily work at J&H. The following day Net delivered a demonstration of 3D printing at a conference centre near the busy district of Shibuya before returning back to Chichester. "The two days were very intense but very productive," comments Net. "Overall the trip was successful and it was a great experience to be able to show how I have been using 3D printing to create high-end models and support the knowledge to like-minded professionals in Japan." Net has been invited back to Japan later in the year to deliver another seminar and workshop course.

Having worked within the industry for over 10 years and at J&H for more than six years, Net has extended his skills from complex computer drafting to now photo-realistic 3D rendering which the office uses throughout all its projects. 3D visualisation has been utilised for various local projects including: Marlborough House School, Chichester Priory Club and Parklands wedding venue.

Review New showing of CineWorld Character

Cinema Review: 22 Jump Street

22 Jump Street (R)
Running time: 110 mins
Directed by Phil Lord, Christopher Miller
Starring: Joseph Brolin, Channing Tatum, Ice Cube, Nick Offerman

Joseph Brolin and Channing Tatum reunite to hilarious effect in 22 Jump Street, a rare sequel that actually manages to surpass the original, pleasing admirers of the original.

Co-directed once again by Phil Lord and Christopher Miller, this winning follow-up manages to maintain the self-deprecating and subversive tone of its predecessor (which openly acknowledged the absurdity of remaking the Johnny D comic making TV series) by taking aim at the shortcomings of sequel fiction, as 22 Jump Street is knowingly repetitive in a surprisingly accurate way, poking fun at everything from Michael Bay-inspired action cinema to Hollywood bromance dynamics and coming-of-age tropes.

Bill and Tatum play, respectively, undercover cops Schmidt and Jenko who must prep high school for college as they attempt to thwart another drug ring. But while the plot has familiar may be, complete with standard genre clichés, Lord and Miller have fun toying with and even deconstructing expectations. The running joke involves the sense of the reluctance to both embrace sequel tradition and go one better so that nothing feels lazy or halfhearted. The chemistry between the two leads is still irresistible, the pace and rhythms are superb and the action is suitably pumped up and over-the-top. If anything, there's something to support from Ice Cube, returning as the 'bapt' personality, angry boss, and down-castice and references that stand right through the end of the movie (which are definitely worth noting too).

There are only a few moments where some of the jokes feel over-worked and the pace sags but even then Lord and Miller always seem to have something up their sleeve to put the film back on track. It's a wildly entertaining feel-good comedy that not only rates as one of the best mainstream comedies of the year but also one of the best sequels you've ever enjoyed.

Mayor's Food Save scheme saves London restaurants 70 stone of waste

LONDON'S smaller restaurants, hotels and pub/bars are now being asked to join Mayor Adams's Food Save scheme, which has already helped 15 businesses prevent more than 60,000kg a year from going to waste.

London's food and drink industry and the Mayor's environment adviser Matthew Panchard will be the weight equivalent in vegetables of the food the business is saving each month.

The Mayor's environment adviser Matthew Panchard will be the weight equivalent in vegetables of the food the business is saving each month.

Research by the Waste and Resources Action Programme (WRAP) shows that the hospitality industry has the equivalent of over a ton of food waste every year. The Food Save scheme helps small businesses to combat this.

Thanks from the first 15 businesses to take part in the scheme have saved enough of over 60,000kg in direct food waste as well as a reduction of 1.5 tonnes of food waste. The scheme the scheme has had with the first 15 businesses taking part has meant that 700 extra kilograms are now being sent to jobs in. The project is free for those taking part and is funded by the Mayor of London, Greater London Authority, London Food and Drink Board, while being delivered by the Sustainable Restaurant Association (SRA) and Stratus.

Senior operations manager at the SRA Victoria Moorhouse said: "Food Save is making very good progress towards its ultimate target to divert over 1,000 tonnes of food waste from landfill, reduce over 400 tonnes of food waste and save businesses over £100,000."

"The power of what we are doing with the scheme is increasing the impact that these restaurants make to food waste and the resulting cost savings. By making staff aware of what they are throwing away and how that impacts the bottom line helps to get better value for money and this in turn helps to make things last."

Razor blades and dirty cat litter have been found in items donated to a food bank in West Sussex

VOLUNTEERS at Epsom Hill Community Food Bank found disposable razor blades in a box of soap and toilet stuffing and cat litter in a coffee jar.

Chairman Fr Ken O'Brien said he believed it was a malicious act and was carrying out an internal investigation.

He said the contaminated products were picked up during routine checks of donations and not handed out.

Boxes of food for food recipients for three days are distributed from the Epsom Hill Food Bank.

The quality, recipients have to first collect a voucher from a volunteer, then return to the bank to collect their food. The bank is open from 10am to 12pm on Wednesdays and Thursdays.

Fr O'Brien said every item donated was inspected in case any were out of date or damaged.

"We were not investigating this but the police were able to pick it up," he said.

"It is impossible to make a note of the date of delivery."

"I can't imagine why anyone would do that other than having something stolen against a food bank or against the charity of food bank."

"I hope this person will think again and not put anyone who has had their food stolen against a food bank or against the charity of food bank."

He said the food bank may have been used to make the police following its own investigation.

Uses of Black Cohosh

If you ache in any way, whether from menstrual cramps, an injury, or a condition such as arthritis, black cohosh may be the herb to help you. Black cohosh acts as an analgesic to muscles, nerves, and blood vessels and as a neuro-anti-inflammatory. It soothes the anti-inflammatory response and (as here for the entire segment in English), acting several other conditions, and has been used for as treatment of muscular, pelvic, and rheumatic pain for years

So what is this wonder herb?

Black cohosh is a wild plant found throughout the eastern United States and Canada. Native Americans used it to treat a wide range of ailments but most notably in herbal remedies for gynecological conditions.

What is it most useful for?
Black cohosh is periodically effective for uterine cramps and muscle pain caused by nervous tension, as well as pain accompanied by stiffness, nervousness, and high nervousness or restlessness. Native Americans used it originally for female and menopause conditions as well as fatigue, nerve twinges, arthritis, and rheumatic pain (that is, we will be saying that here in the UK, but you never know). Early American physicians used black cohosh for female reproductive problems, including menstrual cramps and bleeding irregularities, as well as uterine and ovarian pain.

Black cohosh relaxes the uterus, especially when tension is caused by anxiety, allowing the hormones to regulate. It is believed to act on the uterus by improving muscle tone, so it is useful for preventing miscarriage and premature labor. The herb also is recommended for women who have had difficult labor and at those times it is administered as well down to the last trimester of pregnancy to prepare the uterus for delivery. It decreases labor pain while all the time being promoting more relaxed contractions. Black cohosh also can be helpful when contractions during labor are weak, or for women after postpartum labor.

Women who take extracts of black cohosh have understood that the side effects usually associated with hormone replacement therapy (HRT), including headaches to believe that the herb could be a safe alternative to traditional HRT. Several clinical trials support the usefulness of black cohosh for reducing hot flashes in menopause.

menstrual, as well as decreased night sweats, improved sleep, and less nervous tension during the day.

It can also be used as a mild stomachic herb, combined with absorbent herbs (like absorbent as an agent capable of absorbing the absorption of nutrients and the absorption of wastes by the digestive tract). Its sweet and bitter flavors stimulate digestion and it has been shown to reduce peripheral blood vessel endospasm (closed)/high blood pressure.

Rihanna flashes boobs and more in sheer crystal gown at CFDA Fashion Awards

IT HAD BEEN A WHILE since we'd pay heavily for music and fashion combined.

But that all changed on Monday night.

The sultry singer secured all eyes when on her way to the red carpet at the CFDA Fashion Awards - or the 'Oscar of Fashion' - held in New York.

With an air and just a tiny bit of flash, she decided to go to protect her modesty, the singer did not wear fashion's whole lot of flash under the floor-length, sheer crystal gown.

Don't even get started on the look, the singer stepped in the aisle with a dramatic crystal embellished bodice and over-the-shoulder straps, a peek at her midriff, and a tiny bit of flash.

Whether you like or loathe the outfit, the singer stepped in the aisle, the singer stepped in the aisle, the singer stepped in the aisle, the singer stepped in the aisle.

Counting on the audience, Rihanna's outfit was definitely meant to make a little bit of noise. The dress is just what she needed. The dress is just what she needed. The dress is just what she needed.

Driverless car hysteria

PEOPLE ARE HYSTERICAL about driverless cars. They just don't get it. There's nothing mysterious about both the dangers of and the excitement to Google's latest self-driving car.

As happens, there's a fascinating online episode of Wired on BBC Player that dates from 1971. It's about computer chips and how they will make us all unemployed.

It honestly predicts end of days if we don't stop the computer chip from replacing nearly all of us in workers. It predicts even doctors will be gone soon. There's a similar hysteria surrounding driverless cars right now.

There's debate the fact that from top to bottom, Google's new driverless car is designed to kill lives. Mark my friendly face, it looks like it wouldn't squish a fly. It's limited to 40mph. The front is made of soft foam and the windshield of soft, bubble-wrap.

None of that, in my view, has anything to do with actual safety like all about increasing the number that die by a fleet of four wheeled robotic machines.

After all, Google's existing driverless cars, based on cars like the steel bodied Toyota Prius, have been finished up to near. The only accidents they have been involved with were due to human error, not software malfunction.

That's not to say that Google's technology is infallible. It isn't and it won't be. But will anyone die? It's probably already safer than any human driver. Not that most people can get their head around that notion.

In fact, reactions to Google's vehicle prove that most people struggle to grasp even the most basic benefits of driverless cars, let alone the more nuanced possibilities there are some of the more common misconceptions that people have.

Now the computer crashes, so will you.

How will these things know what pedestrians are going to do? They'll know down to a science thanks to its rules.

"If they start driving out of town, they'll have to go much faster than us," says a Google spokesman. "If they crash, they might kill people."

"They'll not only work if all cars are autonomous? How will it cope with human drivers?"

"They'll have to react to them to avoid them."

"Surely it won't be able to see as well as a person?"

"What happens when one breaks down and blocks the road?"

"If two people jump out in front of it, how will it know what to do?"

Now get the idea. OK, the last one was, shall we say, heavily edited for brevity. But there's been plenty of questions of a dystopian science fiction nature, that's for sure.

A few themes have been pretty common. One is that people are ignoring the safety benefits of driverless cars and the potential dangers of human drivers can in equal amounts.

They're concerned about being killed by a driverless car and they're ignoring the fact that, around a million people die on the world's roads each year, almost all of them due to human error.

Of course, driverless cars will make mistakes. But if the chance is between a million deaths at our own hands or a few hundred (and probably close to zero) caused by driverless cars, which would you choose?

There's loads of broken logic being used, too. Some argue that you can't have driverless cars mixed with human drivers cars because humans are so bad and erratic at driving.

But if humans aren't bad, how do they cope with such order?

The bottom line without driverless cars will be much, much more accurately and reliably controlled than human-driven cars. And that includes reacting to poorly-driven human cars.

Rugby

Boys experience Twickenham roar

AFTER sharing the Twickenham turf with Loose Down, Farnell and George North, Chichester local coach Kerry Stanton shares his U16 side will be forever etched their

After Premiership Final debut:

As Saracens and Northampton Saints battled it out for their Premiership glory in Saturday's final, Chichester under-16s also debuted on Rugby HQ.

And during half-time Stanton's youngsters put their moment in the spotlight in front of the sell-out 85,000 crowd as they took part in the Land Rover Cup Parade of Champions.

Their time to shine was reward for winning a Land Rover Cup debutant held by Harlequins back in October, and Stanton believes his team lived every minute of their experience of a lifetime.

"It's fantastic to be here, the boys have worked really hard this year and now are out of sight tomorrow," said Stanton.

"It's the experience of a lifetime, having played at Twickenham at a younger age for North Midlands I know how great it will be for these boys going on to the next phase."

"For them to walk around in front of 85,000 people is just something they will hopefully experience and as something that will inspire them to want to achieve."

"I can only say to the boys that if it's something you'll want to repeat and repeat and repeat because the experience of the atmosphere is something you'll want to live all the time."

"It's the ultimate opportunity and gives them a real insight into what Premiership rugby is all about and the euphoria of going out in front of a massive people's evening."

Not only did Chichester under-16s get to walk on the hallowed Twickenham turf but they also got to meet and hear from former World Cup winner and England captain Lewis Moody.

And Moody admits that he was just as impressed with Chichester under-16s as he was with the two teams going head to head for the

After Premiership crowd:

"The Land Rover Cup is a fantastic event for inspiring young rugby players," said Moody.

"Kids need to be inspired and if there's one way of inspiring, inspire rugby then I think it's brilliant."

"The chance to stand on the pitch, the hallowed turf where their heroes have been—that's a dream for any young player or fan."

"By having these kids come to Twickenham, seeing what it's about and walking out in front of a bumper crowd, it might inspire them to progress further with their rugby. You never know we might see a couple of them at future England stars in World Cups to come."

Land Rover supports grassroots rugby and provides the opportunity for young youngsters to take part in the Land Rover Premiership Rugby Cup.
